Following the Capitol Storming, several major tech companies banned Trump and Trump-related accounts from their platforms. However, social media corporations aren't the only ones who have had enough of Donald Trump and his cronies. Others include banks, corporations and some associations. Here is a list.

Deutsche Bank has decided not to do more business with Trump. Signature Bank closes personal accounts, calls for resignation and Microsoft said they paused political spending and would reassess their spending in the wake of last week's storming of the Capitol. The online payment platform Stripe will no longer process payments for Mr. Trump's campaign website, Shopify, the company that powers e-commerce sites for more than one million merchants, said on Thursday that it closed two online stores tied to Mr. Trump, including those run by the Trump Organization and the Trump campaign. And several digital platforms — including Snapchat, YouTube, Twitch, Reddit and Twitter — also recently limited or suspended Mr. Trump on their services.

Citigroup, which gave $1,000 in 2019 to the campaign of Senator Josh Hawley of Missouri, one of the senators who voted against the certification of the Electoral College results, said it paused all campaign contributions until March.Goldman Sachs, BlackRock, Bank of America and Wells Fargo said they suspended donations through their PACs.

The P.G.A. of America announced on Sunday night that its board of directors had voted to terminate an agreement to play the P.G.A.

Walmart will halt political donations to lawmakers that opposed certifying president-elect Joe Biden's victory.

It joins Amazon, Morgan Stanley, Dow, and AT&T in deciding to cut funding to specific Republicans. Separately, JP Morgan, Citibank, Microsoft, and Facebook said they will temporarily pause all political donations to both Republicans and Democrats.

Comcast – The major cable company and media group is withholding donations to those who voted against the certification of the presidential election. Hallmark – The greeting card company noted in a statement that "the recent actions of Senators Josh Hawley [of Missouri] and Roger Marshall [of Kansas] do not reflect our company's values," and said it "requested Sens. Hawley and Marshall to return all HALLPAC campaign contributions."

American Express

AT&T

Best Buy

Blue Cross Blue Shield Association

Mastercard

Morgan Stanley

> Verizon

Now, I don't like any of these companies and most should be abolished, as they are all part of the capitalist machine. But that doesn't mean I am going to defend Trump. It was one thing when every celebrity, media outlet and lots of Republicans were calling Trump a conman; it is quite another when the people who fund your bullshit have had enough. It should be mentioned in passing that Trump, on his way out the door, is trying to cut billions in spending, especially as regards Covid aid. What an evil sack of shit this man truly is.
